Some of their specialties are anti-ligature doors and devices, which are frequently used in hospitals, behavioral health institutions, correctional institutes, and other similar institutions, including government offices as a way to prevent suicide or self-harm. Basically, this is a design for door handles that prevents a patient from tying an object on it for the purpose of suicide or self-harm. The anti-ligature locks have curved or sloped corners that make it almost impossible to attach any cord-like object because it will just slide right off the lock. Furthermore, the locking mechanism can be controlled on the inside of the door but there is also unrestricted access from the exterior, which means health care professionals can lock the door from the outside. Hollow metal doors offer several advantages. First, they are strong and durable, while being light. Second, they are both waterproof and fireproof, and they don?t require much in terms of maintenance and care. Third, they are attractive and can contribute to the aesthetics of the office or commercial building. Fourth, they conform with safety rules and regulations. For instance, because they are light, they are easy to open and close, which conforms with the needs of differently abled persons.

Commercial Door Worx can also provide panic devices for commercial buildings. These are designed to help people escape a building much more easily and safely, thus lessening the liability burden of business owners with regards to the issue of negligence and safety.

Also available from Commercial Door Worx are bathroom partitions, which are often needed in mall washrooms and public baths. They can also provide and install public/commercial bathroom accessories, such as paper towel dispensers, paper towel holders, soap dishes, and more.
