June 21, 2023 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Blue Link Electrical Services would like to encourage homeowners in Sydney to switch to LED lights as soon as possible if they currently have halogen downlights installed. Halogen downlights have been known to be very inefficient when it comes to electricity consumption and maintenance, and the company says they can also be quite dangerous in certain conditions.

The company is making this recommendation to the wider community following a recent service call where they discovered halogen downlights were causing serious issues for a client. According to a Facebook post by Blue Link regarding the incident, the client could smell something burning, which is why they called for professional help. Without the help of Blue Link's skilled lighting team, the client's house may have been damaged or worse, leading to the need for expensive repairs or even a total rewiring of the house.

This is one of many emergencies caused by halogen lights, and Blue Link is currently offering quotes on new premium LEDs to anyone who might be looking to swap their halogen downlights for LED in order to avoid such complications. The company assures that a skilled, experienced lighting electrician will be dispatched for all installations.

Halogen downlights are rapidly declining in popularity due to the many drawbacks associated with them. While they provide excellent bright, white light, they consume a great deal of energy to do so. They also produce a lot of heat which increases the risk of electrical fires. Additionally, halogen lights are very difficult to maintain and tend to not last very long, meaning they require frequent replacement (which offsets their relatively low cost).

LED lights consume less than half the amount of energy halogen downlights do while still providing the same bright light. LED lights also produce no heat, which all but eliminates the risk of fire. They also require replacement far less frequently, making them an all-around excellent alternative to halogen lights.

Replacing halogen lights with LEDs is a fairly quick and easy job when handled by professionals, and Blue Link Electrical Services is more than happy to help more Sydney households make the switch from halogen to LED. The company's electricians have years of experience (along with all the necessary qualifications) to make replacing downlights a relatively quick and easy job.
