

Sydney Plumbing Group Assists Residents With Blocked Drains

NSW based Sydney Plumbing Group is reminding local residents that professional help is likely needed if they are dealing with blocked drains. The company encourages everyone to learn how such blockages can occur and why it is important to address them promptly once discovered.

There are several ways a drain can get blocked, as most homeowners will have discovered at some point. In the kitchen, food particles and residue (particularly from oily foods) can easily clog up a drain if not managed or maintained properly. The same can happen with a shower drain, given that hair and beauty product residue can similarly find their way into a drain. These issues can be mitigated to an extent by the use of sink strainers or drain covers, but these solutions are by no means foolproof.

It is recommended that residents be mindful of how they use their drains and what materials are being introduced into the system on a regular basis. In some cases, a change in habit can help minimise the risk of blockages.

A prominent example of this is in toilets, which some may consider a more 'universal' outlet for disposal. While toilets (and sewer systems) are designed to accommodate human waste and toilet paper, for instance, they are not a catch-all for any household product or waste. This includes items that are commonly found in the bathroom, such as sanitary towels and even baby wipes. Similarly, so-called 'flushable' wipes tend to be the main culprits behind blockages.

Sydney Plumbing Group says there are a few simple methods anyone can attempt before calling a professional. For one, they can try using boiling water, poured slowly down the affected drain, to wash and melt away any materials within. Many also report enjoying some success with vinegar and baking soda. After mixing an equal volume of baking soda and vinegar, this solution can be poured down the clogged drain. As it fizzes, it will clear out the drain. It is recommended that the solution be left overnight to work, following which hot water can be introduced to help wash away any remnants.

Sometimes, a drain can be too stubborn to deal with alone, and this is where a plumber can be invaluable. Sydney Plumbing Group was recently called to help a customer deal with a blocked drain. This drain required a tool known as a jet blaster (or hydro blaster) to clear the blockage. While this method was successful, the company's followup inspection uncovered an unrelated issue that the customer had been unaware of: the pipe had suffered a large crack due to being installed improperly by a different contractor.

As this constituted an emergency, the company quickly installed a new section of sewer, with appropriate support, to ensure the customer would not be burdened any longer. Despite the fact that certain home remedies may be enough, this underscores why a reputable professional can make a world of difference.

For their part, Sydney Plumbing Group has an impressive rating on several platforms, with numerous reviews praising their high standard of customer service in addition to the quality of their work. One review mentions, 'I had been trying to get a particular plumber to do several jobs at our house for a week before I contacted Jeremy. I'm glad their slack nature allowed me to get intouch with Sydney Plumbing Group.'

The review explains, 'Jeremy has been nothing but professional, friendly, upfront, and very informative with the services he provided and his recommendations. He kept in constant contact, kept his word on when he would be at our house, how much the parts and labour would be and was fantastic with both the quality of his work and the speed with which he performed them. We now have these guys on our contact list and will be getting in touch with them with more work and would wholeheartedly recommend them to everyone.'
