

Healthday.com Advises On Proper Use Of Knee Brace

December 14, 2015 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Central Hong Kong business Rightnow Products Limited, which has been marketing their knee braces for some time, wants to point to a recent article in Healthday.com, where people are advised on how to properly use a knee brace. The article can be found at <http://health.usnews.com/health-news/articles/2015/12/08/health-tip-using-a-knee-brace>. The company believes the advice is valuable because of the common complaint that the brace sometimes slips.

"It is vital that people know how to properly use their knee brace in order to get the most benefit from it," says Eric Arnow from Rightnow Products Limited. "To find such an authority source as Healthday.com telling people that knee braces are beneficial is wonderful news for the industry as a whole. But for them to also provide advice to people on how to use it to get maximum benefit is even better. Their information completely reaffirms what we have been advising our customers."

Rightnow Products Limited also wants to point out their own knee brace on <http://www.amazon.com/dp/B016WQW7A6>, which is listed as 'perfect for sports, hiking, climbing, tennis, running, walking, yoga, or standing for a long period of time'. One of the things they want to draw attention to is that it is available in two different sizes and it is very important that people choose the right size for their knees.

Secondly, and this is pointed out in the <http://www.healthday.com/> article, some people feel that knee braces slip down. Wearing a brace properly and keeping it in place is absolutely vital. People often assume that a brace should stay in place and believe their product to be defective if it starts to slip. In reality, movement and slippage are normal and part of wearing a brace is adjusting it periodically.

The Rightnow Products Limited set of knee braces has been very well-received. "Product fits great and is very comfortable to wear," says Mary N. "I have very thick legs and it's not constraining at all. It stays in place when moving around and hardly needs adjusting. I have mild knee pain when it's cold outside and this kept my knees warm and pain free for the day. Looking forward to use it more while running and playing basketball."
