"Our skin care treatments include the latest and best in aesthetics technology," says Amy Hatcher, APRN, who owns and operates AWSkinCo+ with her partner Cary Hatcher, FNP-BC, APRN. "Visit our website to browse through the several non-invasive cosmetic skincare procedures we offer or come in for a consultation to determine which one is right for you."

Microdermabrasion is used to exfoliate the skin's outer layer, typically performed with a handheld device that sprays fine crystals or uses a diamond-tipped wand. It helps improve skin texture, tone, and appearance by reducing fine lines, age spots, and mild acne scars.

The treatment is beneficial for individuals seeking to rejuvenate their skin, address minor imperfections, and achieve a more radiant complexion. Microdermabrasion is safe for most skin types and tones but may not be suitable for those with severe skin conditions or active acne.

Chemical peels involve applying a chemical solution to the skin, causing controlled exfoliation of the outer layers to remove damaged skin cells, stimulate collagen production, and promote skin regeneration. Chemical peels come in varying strengths, from mild to deep, targeting different skin concerns like acne, wrinkles, hyperpigmentation, and uneven texture.

They are suitable for individuals seeking to improve skin tone, reduce fine lines, and achieve a more youthful appearance. However, people with sensitive skin or certain medical conditions should consult a dermatologist before opting for a chemical peel to ensure safety and efficacy.

Dermaplaning is an exfoliation procedure in which a sterile surgical scalpel is used to gently remove dead skin cells and fine vellus hair (peach fuzz) from the face. It aims to reveal smoother, brighter skin by promoting cellular turnover. Dermaplaning is beneficial for individuals with dry, rough skin, mild acne scarring, or unwanted facial hair.

The treatment helps improve skin texture, enhances the penetration of skin care products, and provides a more even makeup application. It is generally safe for all skin types, but those with active acne or open wounds should avoid the procedure.

Intense Pulsed Light (IPL) therapy uses pulses of broad-spectrum light to target various skin concerns. It can effectively treat issues like sunspots, freckles, rosacea, and spider veins. IPL therapy works by delivering controlled light energy to the deeper layers of the skin, stimulating collagen production and promoting skin rejuvenation.

It is beneficial for individuals seeking to improve skin tone, texture, and pigmentation irregularities and can provide noticeable results with minimal downtime. IPL is particularly suitable for those with fair to light brown skin and minimal tanning as darker skin tones might experience adverse effects.
