For those who are buying properties, they can look for residential homes, multi-family homes, commercial buildings or lots. Their local team of real estate professionals are equipped with the experience and knowledge about the local area to guide home buyers in navigating the Metropolitan Phoenix real estate market. For home buyers, they want to point out that timing is everything. It is vital to ensure that their credit reports are accurate and if their credit score is questionable, it is vital to have it corrected before going through the home buying process.

The next step is to get pre-qualified for home financing. AXIS real estate agents may recommend a home financing company if requested. To get pre-qualified, the home buyer simply provides the financing company the important information regarding income and the savings and investments. With such information, the financing company can indicate the amount of money that can be borrowed for purchasing a home. The home buyer will then need to get pre-approved for credit with the financing company verifying the home buyer?s financial status.

The next step will be for the home buyer to choose the details of the home financing agreement, such as its duration, whether it will be for 15 years, 25 years, or 30 years. The home buyer may also want to decide on the amount of down payment that they can afford and make the final choice on the home financing provider based on the rates, programs, and reputation. Once these details have been determined, the home buyer can start shopping by taking a look at the list of available properties meeting certain criteria.
