August 10, 2023 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

NC based Intercoastal Public Adjusters Raleigh would like to commend the work of Patrick Lands, Area Manager in Raleigh, Cary and Durham. As a public adjuster for Intercoastal Public Adjusters in Raleigh, Lands has strived to uphold the company's ideals and commitments to the community, and Intercoastal Public Adjusters is proud to acknowledge his dedication to his work.

As with many on the Intercoastal Public Adjusters team, Lands' experience in other industries directly contributes to the value of his involvement in any claim today. For instance, the company points out that he previously fulfilled roles in construction and restoration, which are invaluable when determining the true value of a claim. To build on this strong foundation, however, he has also received training in many areas of restoration from the Institute of Inspection Cleaning and Restoration Certification (IICRC).

The IICRC is a non-profit organization that is respected as the standard for restoration practices across the US. Its values run parallel to those of everyone at Intercoastal Public Adjusters, and any training received here is considered a vital asset. As such, Lands is a strong member of the Intercoastal Public Adjusters team, and perhaps even more appreciated by the clients he has helped over the course of his career.

According to Intercoastal Public Adjusters, one of the main issues with insurance claims is that an insurer should not be considered an advocate for the client. No matter the scale of the damage involved, an insurer is still a business with priorities that tend to lean towards profits rather than honoring the potential full extent of a claim, and this can clash with a home or business owner's needs.

Making matters worse, many fail to realize that they need not rely on the private insurance adjuster assigned to their case at all. It is crucial for people to have an educated and experienced advocate whose investigation will uncover the true extent of any damages sustained during a storm or other catastrophic event as this can mean the difference between a satisfactory reimbursement of losses and a figure that is well below what the policyholder may expect.

Intercoastal Public Adjusters additionally shares that Lands has served more than a decade in law enforcement, and his experience here was mostly in investigation and negotiation. When dealing with a claim, both of these are vital skills, and he is more than willing to put them to work on behalf of his clients. On one hand, he has a reputation for leaving no stone unturned when documenting just how extensive a client's losses may be. On the other hand, he is always ready to negotiate with insurers on the client's behalf, and he can back up his conclusions with the evidence he gathers over the course of an investigation.

There are other reasons a policyholder may wish to work with a public adjuster. Assuming an insurer's investigation results in an accurate estimation of damages, filing a claim can be a stressful and complicated process. Every member of the team at Intercoastal Public Adjusters has worked with insurers in North Carolina, and Lands is no different. Thanks to his deep understanding of the claims process, he can guide policyholders as they file their own claim. Since the client is his priority, he is their best chance at receiving an improved settlement.

Intercoastal Public Adjusters assists clients by representing them in front of their insurer. In the aftermath of a severe loss, clients will likely wish to focus on rebuilding their lives and establishing a new daily routine as quickly as possible. It can be difficult to coordinate this while undergoing the claims process, which is where Intercoastal Public Adjusters can help. For instance, the company can ensure the paperwork involved is always in order, eliminating the risk of incorrect language or other errors that may delay the arrival of a settlement.

The public adjusters at Intercoastal Public Adjusters are licensed in the state of North Carolina. They are qualified professionals ready to stand with clients in their time of need. Anyone may benefit from their involvement by contacting Intercoastal Public Adjusters over the phone or via email.
