March 31, 2015 -

TCU Frog Houses, a student housing company based out of the Fort Worth, Texas, has announced TCU student housing, which will become available on June 1, 2015. There are various homes available for rent, which are listed on the company website, where students can get a look at the lodging they will be renting, the price point, and the neighborhood where they could potentially reside.

TCU student housing was founded by former graduate of TCU, Troy Kunkel, who is also a former football player and resident in the neighborhood where the campus is located. The goal is to keep students close to the school to enable greater access for learning, extracurricular activities, and a safe living space. The company has said the following in regards to their purple housing initiative in an effort to give students at the university access to clean, affordable, well maintained living environments:

"We work hard to provide great places to live close to the TCU campus. We are local and believe in prompt service and being able to make the off-campus living experience a wonderful experience."

Troy and the team encourage those interested in pursuing off-campus student housing to visit the company site, take a look at the options available now, and contact the team to learn more about what future homes may become available throughout the summer and into the school year. TCUFrogHouses.com has explained their involvement in the community, and their website lists various university events, such as baseball and football games for those interested in attending.

The houses offer a great way for students and families to be closer not only to the university, but also to colleagues, classmates and those whom they care about. Students can rent these units together to bring down costs and save on money, but the homes can also be utilized by parents of students hoping to keep their children living at home but wanting to be closer to the school. The team has recognized the potential the rental homes have to provide a more solid living situation to out of town or out of state students also, who aren't from around the area and don't know where to find lodging before the school year starts.

TCUFrogHouses.com encourages the sharing of their home listings on Facebook, Twitter, and other social networking platforms so that students and families can provide interested parties more information regarding prices and the aesthetics of the homes. For a tour or for more information on individual houses, those who view them on the company site can use the contact page to speak with a representative and learn more about nearby businesses, local groups, and what is entailed in the rental of a property and its potential upkeep obligations.
