Jeff Baer from BizViz Launches Free VCF (V Card File) Generator

August 22, 2023

August 22, 2023 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Jeff Baer is proud to announce the launch of VCF Generator, a first-of-its-kind VCF (vCard File) generator that combines an online creation tool with live preview and free file hosting.

VCF (Virtual Card Format) or vCard is one of the most popular ways for storing and exchanging data between software designed primarily for communications, especially email clients. It can also be used to export and import phone contacts whenever one upgrades their mobile device. While it can store images along with contact information, the format is conveniently text-based and human-readable and can be opened in text editors such as Notepad.

“Whether you are running a business, building up a personal brand, or just reaching out to private or professional contacts,” says Jeff Baer, “the VCF file format offers everything that you need to summarize your information across all modes of communication. Apart from your most relevant contact information, such as phone numbers and email addresses, the format is also extensible, allowing you to add links to your website or other social media profiles. Now, with the release of VCF Generator, BizViz is making accessible the full power and flexibility of the VCF format, right in your browser!?

The powerful, free tool from BizViz makes it easy to create virtual business cards in the vCard format. Customers can easily generate a VCF file that contains their names, addresses, emails, social media, and other crucial contact details. It also allows users to add their VCF files to email signatures, websites, and QR codes to streamline and improve communication with others. Users can get started online with its intuitive and easy-to-use interface that offers a live preview of the final result. Moreover, all available fields offer an added level of granularity that allows for inputting precise and detailed contact information.

The name field consists of a prefix, first name, middle name, last name, suffix, and nickname; the work field asks for company name, job title, website, and calendar link; users can enter a home email and work email; phone numbers can be for a personal cell phone, home phone, work phone, home fax, or work fax; the home and work addresses are broken down into a street address, city, state/province, postal code, and country; the social media platforms in the list include Facebook, Twitter, LinkedIn, Instagram, and TikTok. Finally, users can also add relevant notes for their contact card which makes it easier to be found when a user can't remember a person's name or company name but can locate the contact field by matching keywords contained in the VCF notes.

Jeff Baer shares the design process for VCF Generator by saying, "VCF Generator has been meticulously designed to be the quickest way to get started with building a vCard that lets prospective clients and colleagues effortlessly get in touch with you. All the changes you make get immediately reflected in the live preview. So, you always know exactly how the vCard will look to those who access it. Moreover, our free VCF file hosting also guarantees that your vCard will always be online, increasing your reach and opening up a whole new world of business and career opportunities."

VCF Generator is yet another successful product launch from Jeff Baer who has also worked on similar SaaS tools including Smart vCard, Reviews Zip, and Ziphost. The entrepreneur has already received dozens of five-star reviews from the community for the ease of use and reliability of his products as well as the customer service. Particularly, Smart vCard has an impressive overall rating of 4.9 out of 5.0 on App Sumo from nearly 80 reviews.

One review says, "This is the perfect solution if you need a vCard. it is flexible to the degree that it will appeal to any user whether you are a no-code enthusiast or a frontend developer wanting to get a head start. I can quickly whip up a vCard but then download it further, and develop it to suit my specific needs. I love this!"

Readers are urged to find out more about VCF Generator by visiting the VCF Generator website and trying out the software for themselves.
