AUSTIN, TX - September 26, 2023 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

360Connect LLP, a company based in Austin, TX, has explained how storage containers can be customized depending on the specific business requirements. In a recent blog that can be accessed at <https://www.360connect.com/product-blog/20-small-businesses-to-start-in-a-shipping-container/> they explained how 20 different kinds of businesses use shipping containers particularly for their needs.

The article focuses on how small businesses and start-up enterprises are able to use shipping containers to house their business operations. These are construction companies, retail stores, coffee shops, pop-up shops, workshop or studio, e-commerce workspace, bar or restaurant, brewery or distillery, mobile shop, visitor's center, art gallery, plant shop or nursery, farms and farmer's markets, real estate office, apartment complex or dormitory, health clinic, schools, repair shop, event space, and gym or yoga studio.

Construction companies frequently use shipping containers because they can easily be set up at construction sites where they may use them as storage space for tools and materials as well as shelter for workers during the duration of the project, which may last for many years. Shipping containers that are 20 feet and 40 feet in sizes are typically used in construction sites.

Another type of business that may often use shipping containers are retail stores, such as clothing stores, gift shops, jewelry shops, book shops, and more. A spokesperson for 360Connect says, "Small retail businesses and boutiques can find great use out of shipping containers for storefronts. Especially if you are looking to start a small, local business to sell retail items, a shipping container can allow you to find the right amount of space on a small budget. Plus, storage containers can be stacked at any time (for instance, if you end up needing to expand) to add more space to your shop."

Those who are launching a bar or restaurant may also use shipping containers. Converted shipping containers allow business owners to try various kinds of design and decor. In addition, the use of containers may even make the start-up business stand out among other bars and restaurants in the area.

Mobile shops that offer food and beverages, including ice cream shops, may also use shipping containers, which can easily be set up in public areas to cater to walkers, joggers, pedestrians, and more.

Art galleries may also use shipping containers as places to display works of art. Shipping containers can offer an affordable option for artists who don't have the budget for a rented space on a monthly or ongoing basis.

Meanwhile, climate-controlled storage containers may be needed for perishable and temperature-sensitive goods. These include: furniture, electronics equipment, artwork, musical instruments, and other items such as books and antiques. 360Connect explains how businesses can find climate controlled storage in a blog post that can be accessed at <https://www.360connect.com/product-blog/climate-controlled-storage-all-you-need-to-know/>.

Businesses can save a lot of time and money by renting these climate controlled storage units. There's even no need to worry about maintenance and other related expenses while transporting goods in these climate controlled units. The ideal temperature in these units is between 55 and 80 degrees, which protects the items and valuable possessions from extreme cold, heat, and humidity. These climate-controlled storage units may also be used by people who are moving and need a place to temporarily store their belongings. At 360Connect they find the best match clients with the best suppliers in their area.
