When it's time to replace worn asphalt shingles, homeowners in the Towson area have several options to consider. Towson Roofing Pros, a trusted local roofing contractor based in Towson, MD outlines the key differences between the most common asphalt shingle types so property owners can make informed decisions.

Asphalt shingles are a popular choice for roofing due to their cost-effectiveness and durability. Towson Roofing Pros recognizes the importance of choosing the right type of asphalt shingle, and they are committed to guiding homeowners through this process.

According to the company, there are several types to choose from when it comes to asphalt shingles. The first type is three-tab shingles, which are the most basic and cost-effective option. These shingles have a flat appearance and feature three cutouts or tabs in each shingle. They are available in a range of colors and are suitable for most residential roofing applications.

Another type is architectural shingles, also known as laminated or dimensional shingles. These shingles offer a more upscale look for roofs. They are thicker than three-tab shingles and have a textured finish. Architectural shingles are not only visually appealing but also tend to be more durable and come with longer warranties.

For homeowners looking for added protection against extreme weather conditions, impact-resistant shingles are a great choice. Designed to withstand hailstorms, strong winds, and other harsh weather, these shingles have a reinforced fiberglass core and are coated with a special asphalt mixture. Although they may have a higher upfront cost, impact-resistant shingles can save homeowners money in the long run by reducing the need for storm-related repairs.

Solar-reflective shingles are another option worth considering. These shingles are coated with pigments that reflect sunlight, reducing heat absorption and keeping homes cooler in hot climates. Solar-reflective shingles help lower energy consumption and contribute to a more energy-efficient home.

The spokesperson of Towson Roofing Pros also mentions that homeowners who are concerned about the environment may want to consider eco-friendly shingles. These shingles are made from recycled materials and are designed to be more sustainable. They are available in various styles and colors, allowing homeowners to choose an option that aligns with their aesthetic preferences.

"At Towson Roofing Pros, we are dedicated to helping homeowners make informed decisions about their roofing needs," said the spokesperson from the company. "By explaining the different types of asphalt shingles available, we aim to assist homeowners in choosing the most suitable option for their homes."

Towson Roofing Pros takes pride in their exceptional reputation, as reflected in their outstanding 5-star reviews on Google. Satisfied customer Florence Brown shared her experience, stating, "This company installed new copper flashing at my home in Yorktown a few days ago. Beth did a good job managing the installation. They do quality work, and they have a friendly team."

In addition to their expertise in asphalt shingles, Towson Roofing Pros emphasizes the importance of proper gutter installation for both residential and commercial roofs. Their knowledgeable team provides valuable information on the significance of gutters in protecting properties from water damage and maintaining structural integrity.
