We will start with the basic steps you should take and then go into further detail that will help those in pedestrian involved accidents assess their next steps.?

The first step to take for a pedestrian accident victim is to seek medical treatment for injuries. It is important to do this even if there are no apparent injuries because some injuries may only become apparent after some time has passed. It is vital to keep records of all medical treatments received, including doctor?s notes, medical bills, and receipts.

The second step is to call the police to the place where the accident occurred, even if the injuries suffered appear to be minor. This is important because the police will make an accident report, which may be used as evidence for the case later on. The next step is to collect evidence at the scene of the accident. These may include contact information of witnesses, photos of the vehicles involved and the area, and any available video footage. These are vital evidence for establishing the other party?s liability and extend of the damages and injuries suffered.

The next step is to contact a lawyer with experience and expertise in pedestrian accidents. An experienced attorney can help the accident victim navigate the legal process, conduct negotiations with the insurance firms, and build a strong case for the accident victim. Next is the filing of an insurance claim with the insurance company of the at-fault driver to get compensation for damages and injuries. Next is the filing of a lawsuit if a fair settlement cannot be achieved.
