This will help minimize the structural and financial damage for the property owner.

Richard Appel, owner of Dry Star Restoration, says, ?You can ultimately rely on a professional water damage contractor who has years of experience in the field to do the job right. While a broken pipe or toilet can be cumbersome, it is certainly not the end of the world. With the right drying, cleaning, and restorative techniques, your home can be put back the way it was in a short period of time. You?ll appreciate the streamlined process that has been used by Dry Star Restoration since 2012 to clean up your home and make it shine once again.?

The technicians from Dry Star Restoration will conduct an initial water damage inspection to quickly assess the damage by classifying it based on various classes and categories of damage. Heavier damage will usually require specialty drying methods to save stone, brick, concrete, and hardwood.

Drying and cleaning are two vital elements of the water damage repair process. Thus, dehumidifiers are used to make sure all moisture has been eliminated. They will also make sure that the various parts of the HVAC system, such as ducts, radiators, and vents and other important components are thoroughly dry and clean. Furniture pieces will also need to be restored whenever possible.

Once all the surfaces have been ascertained to be dry, they start cleaning the soft fabrics to make sure that mold and mildew will not get the opportunity to grow. Antimicrobial products may be used and air scrubbers are utilized to get rid of moisture and dirt particles that have accumulated in the air.

In the last step of the water damage restoration process is the actual restoration. Any materials that have been ruined beyond repair will be eliminated and replaced with new ones. This includes the home insulation, including drywall. Mold remediation may also be provided if mold has managed to grow and multiply aggressively while the home was flooded with water. The expert technicians will ensure that all potentially harmful microorganisms are eliminated and prevented from multiplying in the home.
