Ronnie Mabra, founder and managing partner of The Mabra Law Firm, says, ?Motor vehicle crashes are some of the most common injuries people face. It is common for victims of negligence to contact a personal injury law firm and file a claim. When they do, a vast amount of questions surface about the legal system and how things work. No doubt, filing a claim comes with many twists and turns. If you have questions about your accident, look no further. Our auto accident lawyers have the answers to your most frequently asked questions.?

The lawyers at The Ronnie Mabra Law Firm advise car accident victims to follow a number of steps after getting involved in an accident. The first thing they recommend that an accident victim should do is to call emergency services. This is important to make sure that all accident victims will receive medical attention and get checked for injuries. This is important because some injuries may not immediately become apparent right after the accident. Symptoms may get delayed by days or even weeks or months.

After seeking medical attention, the next thing to do is to get the other individual?s personal info and try as much as possible to preserve the evidence by not allowing anyone to touch the car or the items on the road. It may be a good idea to take photographs of these if possible. Some of the important information to get from the other party is their name, telephone number, address, license plate number, and their insurance firm.

When the police officers arrive at the scene, it is important to tell them the various details that one can remember regarding the car collision. The police will write up a police report and they can even be called to act as witnesses. It is also important to get a copy of the police report because this can be used when filing an insurance claim. However, if the incident occurred on private property, the police would have little jurisdiction.

Lastly, it is essential to get the services of a car accident attorney in Douglasville. The lawyer can offer the proper advice on the types of damages that can be claimed by the accident victim. General damages are composed of the physical injuries suffered by the victim, such as pain and suffering, loss of consortium, mental trauma, disfigurement, and PTSD. Anything that causes a reduction in the quality of life of the individual can be classified as general damages.

Special damages include such things as damages to physical property or medical bills. Physical damages also include: motor vehicle repairs, compensation for irreplaceable items, and damaged property repairs.

It is also important for car accident victims to be aware of the statute of limitations in Georgia that provides a limit on the number of years that they can wait to file a lawsuit against someone. For filing a claim for damages or wrongful death, people have up to two years to file a claim in the State of Georgia.
