The Cup Coffee House, based in Sugar Land, TX, is taking a look at one of the most widespread categories of humor on the internet: coffee memes. While many memes regarding coffee are simple and straightforward, the universal appeal of the beverage appears to elevate the humor and make every meme feel more relatable ? and The Cup Coffee House seeks to find out why. To understand why coffee memes (or memes in general) inspire emotion of any kind, it is important to recognize the allure of the subject itself. Coffee, for instance, has been a part of human civilization for centuries, with the oldest credible evidence of coffee drinking emerging in the middle of the 15th century in what is now Yemen. This evidence does also indicate that coffee seeds were first roasted and then brewed in a similar manner to modern day consumption.

History also shows the beverage was popular in Egypt, Persia, Turkey and so on, and according to the National Coffee Association, coffee had become one of the world?s most profitable export crops by the end of the 1700s. Anyone who enjoys coffee today will find it easy to understand why, given the wide variety of ways it can be prepared and enjoyed. Whether a person prefers their coffee to have a more Arabian lean, perhaps enjoyed alongside sweet dates, or doused in plenty of milk and sugar, coffee remains a universal constant that everyone can relate to.

The Cup Coffee House, along with many others, attributes the popularity of coffee memes to the popularity of the beverage itself. The mere fact that so many people from vastly different backgrounds, cultures, and beliefs share a common preference for coffee allows coffee memes to cross boundaries in a way many other subjects cannot.

There are also various references to people being unable to live or function normally without coffee, and the hilarity of any coffee meme can often be elevated with the use of animal subjects. This introduces another layer to such memes, particularly for animal lovers. A similar effect takes place when coffee is combined with images from popular media. Certain TV shows and movies, for instance, may have characters whose behavior is tied in some way to coffee. Minor examples of this can be seen in scenes where the character all but falls out of bed and then gradually becomes more animated as events play out. Notably, the coffee itself need not be the point of the scene; it simply exists as a background element that improves how relatable the characters are at that point. Everyone feels sleepy, and everyone loves coffee.

Some pieces of media may go even further and write jokes or scenes that make coffee the centerpiece of whatever events will unfold. This may be more common in TV shows where plotlines and characters are intentionally written to provide social commentary on historical or contemporary events. In either case, coffee ties such scenes together and helps audiences connect with the characters and media overall.

Naturally, this also births countless memes that are propagated online between people who may or may not consume the original media. In fact, many coffee memes involve characters or scenes that a recipient need not be familiar with. The message is always clear because it always has more to do with coffee ? which everyone intrinsically understands ? and the characters in a coffee meme are little more than vehicles for the laughter it produces.

Fortunately for everyone who is a fan of coffee and coffee-related memes, the internet and its users show no sign of slowing down their creative talents in this arena. Coffee memes are still being produced and shared by millions everyday, and this means there will always be a meme to laugh at.
