Napolin Accident Injury Lawyer Orange County, based in California, is helping local residents seek compensation following a slip-and-fall injury. A slip and fall injury can occur in a variety of locations, and this may play a role in how a case progresses. In short, however, the firm says clients should seek a lawyer?s advice if they believe their fall occurred as a result of another party?s negligence. Such negligence can be determined by a variety of factors, such as a property owner failing to place sufficient warning (like signage) that a hazard is present in a walking area. Maintenance workers not adequately indicating a floor is wet is also an example of negligence, but there are many others.

Unlike car accidents, medical malpractice and so on, many may believe that a slip and fall is not worth taking notice of. This belief may in turn be based on the conclusion that a fall would be more inconvenient and embarrassing than physically dangerous. Some may even feel that only seniors are at serious risk of bodily harm during a fall. None of these so-called facts are necessarily true, as evidenced by the millions of Americans of all ages and backgrounds who find themselves requiring emergency care each year.

Workers should be aware that the negligence of their employer can put their health and wellbeing at similar risk. A slip and fall that takes place in an office may make the victim eligible for workers? compensation, for instance, and it is always in their best interests to seek an attorney?s input. As in all cases, Napolin Accident Injury Lawyer Orange County strongly advises fall victims against signing any related documents or accepting a settlement before consulting with their own legal representative.
