The Macon-based personal injury law firm, Kenneth S. Nugent, P.C., is urging the public to exercise caution when dealing with insurance companies following an accident or personal injury incident. They recommend consulting with a trusted lawyer immediately.

Sometimes, insurers may deliberately deny valid claims, a practice known as acting in bad faith. In such instances, a skilled law firm can help victims file a bad faith claim against the insurer for illegal or reckless actions.

Kenneth S. Nugent, P.C. highlights that while insurance agreements are binding contracts, insurance companies, motivated by profit, might try to avoid their obligations. As businesses, insurance companies might prioritize their own financial interests, making them hesitant to honor valid claims.

Given the vast legal resources insurance companies possess, it's challenging for individuals to pursue compensation alone. However, Kenneth S. Nugent, P.C. is well-equipped to assist in these situations.

Grounds for filing a bad faith claim against an insurer include pressuring the victim, providing poor advice, unjustly denying or delaying payment, and insufficient investigation of claims. If someone experiences such behaviors from an insurance provider, they should reach out to Kenneth S. Nugent, P.C. for assistance.

Upon taking a case, the firm reviews the client's full insurance record, which includes policy details and company guidelines on claims processing. They then initiate legal action, aiming to recover due amounts, associated legal expenses, and interest. Furthermore, to discourage insurance companies from such practices, they also pursue punitive damages. By partnering with a dedicated legal team like Kenneth S. Nugent, P.C., victims can protect both themselves and the larger community from unscrupulous insurers.
