The personal injury law firm Kenneth S. Nugent, P.C. Attorneys at Law is extending its legal expertise to individuals who have experienced personal injuries due to construction mishaps in Albany and other prominent Georgian cities.

A report from the Bureau of Labor Statistics, dated 25th March 2021, highlights the concerning numbers: Georgia witnessed 207 fatal work injuries in 2019. Breaking this down by sector, the private construction industry recorded the most fatalities, with 47 deaths, making up nearly a quarter of all work-related fatalities in Georgia. These fatalities arise from various causes, ranging from transportation mishaps, exposure to harmful substances, to being caught in machinery or slipping on-site.

Construction zones are inherently hazardous. Even minor oversights can lead to severe consequences. As a preventative measure, construction sites mandate strict adherence to safety protocols, including wearing appropriate personal protective gear such as helmets, safety shoes, eye protection, and more. The perimeter of the site is distinctly marked, preventing unauthorized access, and workers are constantly reminded through signage to adhere to safety guidelines.

However, even the most stringent measures cannot completely prevent accidents. Following any incident, a rigorous investigation ensues to determine culpability, often involving a deep dive into both state and federal safety regulations. Such investigations aim to trace the sequence of events leading up to the accident.

Navigating the aftermath of a construction-related accident can be daunting. Often, companies attempt to divert blame or attribute it to the injured party. Thus, for victims, having an adept attorney is paramount to ensure they receive the rightful compensation.

Speaking on the firm's offerings, a representative said, "Injuries from construction accidents can be debilitating or, tragically, fatal. Victims facing a corporate legal team can feel overwhelmed, especially when these teams aim to minimize compensation or dissuade claims. With our vast experience in personal injury cases, we are well-versed in the strategies employed to undercut victims.
