The law firm of Kenneth S. Nugent P.C. is helping victims of medical malpractice get the representation they need to fight their cases in court.

Around 250,000 medical malpractice deaths occur per year in the United States. In fact, Hopkins Medicine reports that medical malpractice is the third leading cause of death in the United States. For those who have been injured because of medical malpractice in Athens, Georgia, the law firm of Kenneth S. Nugent P.C. can help create a compelling case that highlights the mistakes made by the medical providers and gives victims a chance to get the resources they need to recover physically and financially from their ordeal.

?You?re not alone if you have experienced medical malpractice,? says the spokesperson for Kenneth S. Nugent P.C. ?On top of how widespread the issue is, medical malpractice cases are also complex to deal with. For the best chance of building a solid case, you need an attorney who is skilled in gathering evidence, providing damages, and valuing the monetary worth of your situation. The ideal attorney also needs to be a skilled negotiator who can deal with insurance companies.?

At Kenneth S. Nugent P.C., the attorneys are adept at representing clients through various categories of medical malpractice lawsuits. This can include failing to inform a patient about a treatment?s side effects and risks, failing to correctly diagnose the illness, and errors that can happen during surgery. It is also important to seek help soon as most states place a time limit on when patients can file a malpractice claim. In Georgia, residents have two years from the date of injury to file the same. If filing on behalf of someone who died, plaintiffs must file the claim within two years of the death.

The law firm?s spokesperson hammers home the importance of choosing an experienced medical malpractice attorney by saying, ?You really need someone in your corner who understands the system and can fight for you to make up for your physical pain, loss of income, inability to perform your job, mental anguish, and excessive medical bills that all stem from a medical procedure gone wrong. Here at Kenneth S. Nugent P.C., we have the experience, contacts, and skills to build an effective malpractice case. You will benefit from over 350 years of combined legal experience that has helped collect millions of dollars on behalf of our clients.?
