Alexander Napolin says, ?Pickup trucks are an incredibly popular class of automobile on the streets of Southern California. Many consumers choose to purchase light and heavy duty pickups for passenger transportation purposes. They do so without plans to ever use the towing capacity or the cargo bed. Unfortunately, the proliferation of pickups for passenger transport on the public streets has introduced more danger to persons and property. These dangers manifest in the form of truck accident.?

Trucks are typically much heavier than cars and motorcycles, and they are generally more difficult to maneuver and to slow down when avoiding rear-end collisions and other accidents. Furthermore, the uneven distribution of weight because of an empty bed can result into loss of control during rapid acceleration or deceleration. Those who got involved in a truck accident despite being careful and obeying all traffic laws, can file a lawsuit against the negligent driver especially if they have suffered serious injuries. The size of the lawsuit will actually depend on the severity and extent of the injuries. The injured party will need to consult with a personal injury lawyer and act fast and get medical documentation to prove the severity of the injuries.

Those who have suffered injury while on the job can file a workers? compensation insurance claim. Each victim has the right to have a lawyer at any time during the claims process with the Workers? Compensation Appeals Board (WCAB). The four key benefits for workers are: medical treatment, temporary disability benefit, permanent disability benefit, and job retraining voucher.
