

NW Best Movers: Plan Any Office Move For Success

December 26, 2023 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

NW Best Movers, based in Seattle, WA, is recommending that clients create a detailed plan if they will be moving to a new office in the near future. Having worked on countless moves, the company says much of the stress associated with the process can be alleviated with advance planning.

“Moving to a new house can be a complicated endeavor, but moving an entire office can often seem like a totally insurmountable task,” observes NW Best Movers. “You’re not just responsible for yourself, you’re planning for several thousands of dollars in equipment that each employee will need to continue their work with minimal disruption. This equipment may also include highly sensitive data pertaining to your operations, employees, clients and so on. It is a massive responsibility that is both time-consuming and stressful, but with proper preparation, it can be made smoother and less overwhelming.”

One of the most important things to do before a move, the company says, is to create a detailed plan. This plan should include everything from the timeline of the move to the budget, logistics and so on. It is vital that all employees be made familiar with each relevant aspect (especially if they are contributing to the move in any way) as part of the planning process, and the final plan should then be communicated with everyone.

This will help ensure that everyone is on the same page, in turn ensuring that the move will go smoothly.

The first order of business should always be to assess and analyze the move's requirements. For instance, given that the new office is likely to have more (or less) floor space as well as a different layout, a planner should consider how this will affect the move. Should the move include large or heavy objects, accessibility to the site following delivery should also be taken into account. A preliminary idea of the budget, timeline and logistical needs of the entire move should be mapped out here.

Following this, it may be wise to build a relocation team, comprising key employees from various departments. Depending on their everyday responsibilities or skills, specific roles may be assigned. NW Best Movers says some businesses take it upon themselves to treat an office move as a full blown project, going so far as to assign a project manager, IT coordinator, facilities manager, communication liaison and more. This is not always necessary, but it bears consideration for more complicated moves.

One of the most important aspects of any move is its budget, and NW Best Movers says it is best to start by estimating how much each individual component of the process will cost. This includes packing, disassembling, transportation, new equipment, furniture and potential downtime. Larger offices may benefit from splitting each stage so that deadlines for individual targets can be set appropriately, thus making the move more manageable.

Another important aspect of every office move is the safety of any equipment being transferred. A plan should always detail exactly how office equipment, documents, personal belongings and more will be packed, labeled and transported. Should employees be tasked with packing items under their care, they should be instructed on both packing and labeling procedures to ensure a smooth unpacking process.

NW Best Movers adds that no move is complete until the business is fully up and operational once more. As such, a moving plan should explain how the unpacking stage will progress, especially if certain items will receive priority over others. IT systems, for instance, will need to be set up and tested (ideally by a trained team) to ensure employees can get back to work as soon as possible even if other items will return to the office floor at a later time.

In any case, the best way to guarantee a smooth and stress-free move is to work with professional office movers in Seattle.
