December 21, 2015 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

A Hawaiian baby toy source called Kute Keiki has announced the worldwide release of its BPA Free teething toys. This high-quality product is manufactured using 100 percent food-grade silicone to address the needs of teething babies.

Teething has been known to have an adverse effect on many infants and can even affect their parents as well. The company's mission statement is offering the best in baby teething products on the market today to help those parents and their babies when teething time comes.

In the Hawaiian language, Kute Keiki actually means "child". The company's primary business goal is promoting products that can help children everywhere with their ability to thrive. Their BPA Free teething toys are FDA approved, bacteria resistant, hygienic, and hypoallergenic. In addition, they are free from not only BPA, but also cadmium, latex, lead, phthalates and PVC.

To make their teething remedies more attractive to babies themselves, the company has manufactured them in a variety of three different designs and in three separate colors. They come in a multi-colored variety pack of three BPA free teething toys. This product also offers a textured toy that is multi-sensory and provides relief to teething babies through massage that stimulates the development of healthy teeth while soothing the baby's gums.

For practicality purposes, the teething remedies are dishwasher safe, making them easier to keep clean. They are also freezer safe and can be stored in the refrigerator or freezer for additional teething relief for soothing the baby's gums. An included bonus teething necklace makes the BPA free teething toys hang-up ready for wearing around the parent's neck, or for hanging on a crib, car seat or stroller. This actually could put an end to missing teething remedies.
