There are many instances of personal injuries where an individual can get injured as a result of the negligence of another party. A common incident is where a drunk driver crashes into the car the victim is driving, thus resulting into injuries. Or an individual may be visiting another person?s home but a hazard in the home, such as a slippery wet floor, causes the individual to slip and fall, resulting into a traumatic head injury. The kind of accident will play a significant role in the personal injury claim that can be made. The typical types of injury cases include: premises liability, wrongful death, car accidents, product liability, medical malpractice, truck accidents, nursing home abuse, motorcycle crashes, and dog bites. In personal injury cases, negligence and accountability play an important role. Negligence is a legal concept that means every individual is to be held responsible for the harm they cause to other people. Even if it was an accident and not purposely done to hurt another person, that individual can be held accountable and liable for the injuries and related damages. The spokesperson explains, ?No matter what type of accident you were hurt in, the negligent person can be held legally accountable for their actions. You do this through the injury claim process. Filing an injury claim could result in financial compensation for you. Your Pensacola injury lawyer can better explain the process of filing a claim for your accident.?

It is difficult to fully comprehend the personal injury claim process, especially for someone who hasn?t experienced an injury accident before. The process may actually feel intimidating and overwhelming for most people. Thus, Gross and Schuster would like to present the basic steps that an individual can take when filing a personal injury claim.

The first step is to investigate the accident to determine who was responsible for it. The next step is to gather evidence to show that the accident was indeed the fault of a particular individual. The third step is to gather evidence regarding one?s injuries, such as medical reports. The next step is to estimate the value of the total losses suffered, including medical expenses, lost wages, permanent injury, and pain and suffering. The fifth step is to file the claim with the help of a personal injury lawyer and submit it to the insurance firm of the negligent party. This is followed by negotiations with the insurance company until the insurer agrees to pay a fair settlement. If negotiations fail, the claim may be taken to court.
