The fascia is the board that is installed at the place where the roof meets the outer walls of the building. It is the fascia that supports the lower edge of the bottom row of roof tiles. And it is also the fascia that carries the gutters. The soffit is the board that is installed under the fascia board, and it is the board that is usually seen most from the street level. It is often ventilated to allow air to flow into the roof area.

Homeowners are advised to be always aware of the condition of their soffit and fascia because if they are damaged, they can lead to serious problems for the home if they are not fixed promptly. Oftentimes, the soffit and fascia are overlooked but they require maintenance and can cause a major problem if they are not repaired properly. Some of the common problems encountered with soffits and fascias are: flaking and peeling paint and damp and rotting soffits and fascias.

Peeling and flaking paint doesn?t just make the soffit and fascia unattractive, this can allow moisture to get to the wooden structure and cause it to rot. The solution is to regularly sand down and repaint the timber soffit or fascia. With regards to damp or rotting sofffits and fascias, they need to be replaced as soon as possible. This will prevent the problem from spreading and causing more damage. It will also help in maintaining the integrity of the structure of the roof.
