Old World Quest, a platform dedicated to exploration and discovery, highlights a groundbreaking YouTube video by intrepid explorer, Paul Cook, entitled "I Bet You Have Seen Nothing Like This Before.. This Is Forbidden To Speak About? Manoel Island." The video showcases previously unseen man-made complexes on Manoel Island, defying expectations and challenging conventional beliefs about historical sites. Readers are urged to visit the Old World Quest's website to watch the video now.

The video kicks off with captivating aerial drone footage of Manoel Island, marked by arrows on a map, revealing intricate structures that have been reconstructed on top of older ones, forming a macro structure. Despite increased security and police presence over the last two years, Paul Cook, undeterred, explores these hidden complexes, emphasizing their man-made origin.

In the initial segments, Cook introduces the geopolymer construction of the structures, emphasizing their unique frequency pattern-shaped design. The video promises to unravel more discoveries in subsequent sections, urging viewers to join the exploration and share their opinions.

The five-part video series delves into various aspects of the exploration:

Megalithic Marvels on Manoel Island

Cook details the discovery of megalithic block work on Manoel Island, highlighting the interplay of limestone and geopolymer blocks. Small entrances and tunnels, potentially serving as conduits for services like water or electricity, further deepen the mystery. He encourages viewer engagement, recognizing the complexity of the network beneath the structures.

Unlocking Forbidden Areas in Malta's Hidden History

Recounting his experiences gaining access to off-limits areas in Malta, Cook features structures reminiscent of the Gardens of Babylon. The awe-inspiring history and architectural wonders, now behind welded metal bars and grates, are shared with the audience, emphasizing the forbidden nature of exploration. #### Unflooded Underground Complex on Manoel Island

In a surprising revelation, Cook uncovers an underground complex on Manoel Island that defies expectations by remaining unflooded despite its proximity to water. Limestone pillars, rebar, and rendered walls hint at an ancient past, while he navigates challenges like alarms and helicopters. The complexity and age of the entrances suggest a rich history waiting to be unraveled.

Ancient Structures and Advanced Knowledge

The final section explores an ancient structure suspected to be built using geopolymer and manipulated stone. The presence of rebar in limestone stirs excitement, indicating advanced knowledge of materials and construction techniques by the ancients. Cook promises an upcoming video focusing on the complex's interior and underground areas.

Old World Quest invites viewers to engage with the video by liking, subscribing, commenting, and sharing. The platform continues to highlight exploration, uncovering the forbidden and bringing historical mysteries to light.
