The process of moving a pool table begins with the company's technicians disassembling it by removing the pockets, rails, and felt. The screws holding the pool table together are carefully packed and labeled to make the final reassembly quick and easy. Next, the frame and legs are carefully disassembled ensuring all pieces are well-protected. Each piece is then wrapped in moving blankets and secured with packing tape. The heaviest part of the pool table, the slate, is moved separately.

The spokesperson says, "Moving the slate is the most difficult part due to its weight. We use a professional pool table dolly. Throughout the process, we ensure that the slate is well-supported and securely strapped to avoid cracks or damage during transit. We use well-padded moving trucks to transport everything. During the move, the slate is placed on its side to prevent warping. When we arrive on-site, we reassemble the pool table in reverse order and then level it carefully using a carpenter's level and adjust the legs accordingly. Finally, once reassembled, we refelt the table, ensuring a smooth and taut surface, stretching it evenly and trimming excess material."
