Party Walls London - Hamilton Darcey Offers Advice on Party Wall Issues and Boundary Disputes

January 24, 2024

London, UK - January 24, 2024 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Party Walls London - Hamilton Darcey, a company based in London, UK, takes pride in its specialist team of surveyors who are experienced in all neighbourly issues. They can provide advice on design proposals to help building owners avoid preventable party wall concerns and neighbour disputes. The company's surveyors are frequently appointed to represent property owners and developers throughout England and Wales. They act as surveyor for both building owners and adjoining owners, offering proper advice based on the requirements of the appointing owner.

A spokesperson for Hamilton Darcey says, "We also assist building owners in serving timely and valid party wall notices, effectively minimising project delays. Our party wall surveyors also work with adjoining owners. We act on behalf of freehold owners, head-lessees and leaseholders to prevent unnecessary inconvenience and legal disputes related to construction works at a neighbouring property."

The chartered surveyors from Party Walls London also work frequently with developers and adjoining owners who have issues with regards to crane oversail and scaffold licenses. Using their insights into design changes, they can help minimise the risks of legal issues. They can also assist in streamlining the negotiation of licence agreements. They can help in determining possible crane oversailing problems during the early stages of a project, which helps to prevent delays and even litigation in the worst-case scenario.

With regards to boundary determination, the chartered surveyors from Party Walls London can help with various issues, from examining deed plans to finding the proper position of dividing walls. They can also perform a thorough site survey and a measured survey to accurately plot all of the present and historic boundaries on a site development plan. They can also serve as expert witnesses in the event that a client's case goes to court.

They can also help with regards to the right to light, which entitles a property owner legally to have natural light passing over their property and its defined apertures. This right is usually affected when there are new developments. Thus, developers need to evaluate their project's possible impact on neighbouring properties. The team of chartered surveyors at Hamilton Darcey can assist developers in coming up with an appropriate strategy that will not affect their goals. They can also help adjoining owners by offering advice on the possible effect of a new development on their right to light.

Established in 2015, Hamilton Darcey LLP is an RICS regulated chartered surveying practice with offices located in London and Birmingham. The firm undertakes instructions for all aspects of building surveying and design services while applying their specialist knowledge in the high end residential and commercial sectors. With significant experience spanning a wide range of disciplines, including licence for alterations, dilapidations and technical due diligence, major works project management, and party wall and neighbourly issues, the company serves as a trusted advisor for individuals and business entities. Chris Cooper, co-founder of Hamilton Darcey, earned a degree in building surveying from Sheffield Hallam University. He qualified as a professional member of the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors and he was accepted as a member of the Chartered Institute of Arbitrators and the Pyramus and Thisbe Club.

The spokesperson says "Hamilton Darcey LLP addresses all your concerns regarding party walls, right to light, boundary disputes and crane and scaffold oversail agreements. We are based in London and our services are available to clients throughout England and Wales. What makes us different is that our team makes a conscious effort to be responsive to clients at all times.
