The team at Resilient Film Studios LLC is pleased to announce they will now be working with Jon Cring. Cring's capabilities as a Director, Producer and Screenwriter are notable, and with Resilient's help, film lovers can expect to see films with his signature narrative style coming out in the near future.

Apart from the depth of experience and technical expertise Cring brings to every project, Resilient says one of the main reasons he is expected to make a splash in their future projects is his unique approach to storytelling. While some may prefer to focus on tales that already have a sense of grandeur to build their narrative, Cring makes it a point to treat every story as an opportunity to craft an epic.

"He has a gift for finding magic in the mundane," comments a member of the team at Resilient Film Studios LLC. "Or perhaps it is more accurate to say he makes an effort to treat every premise or protagonist as if it can provide the foundation for a compelling piece of art. Today, box office hits are dominated by colorful heroes of every kind, but while these films can certainly be used to tell great stories, we must not forget about the regular, everyday hero. Cring tries to showcase the heroism in humanity and the beauty in small moments, something we all strive to do here at Resilient.?

Cring hails from a family of creatives, being born to parents who were themselves gifted in the arts. A native of Columbus, Ohio, he grew up in an environment of constant creativity, and his family spent years traveling and performing in various venues. As such, his background in both music and drama began when he was very young.

He was also no stranger to the practicalities involved with leading such a life. It is no secret that Cring gained an understanding of the business aspect of entertaining on the move in his early adolescence, and he could often be found getting on the phone to discuss his family's next gig with clients, venues and so on. However, his eye would not turn towards filmmaking until he met his future wife and associate, Tracy Nichole.

The duo learned quickly that their unique talents worked well when brought together. Their first short film, "Hank's Place," caught the eye of critics and audiences alike and was swiftly made a feature at several film festivals, and they went on to fine-tune their craft by working on a series of experimental films. During this period, they explored their strengths and interests together, and this ultimately culminated in Cring realizing he wanted to apply himself to feature-length films. He enjoyed a great deal of success in this regard, and his portfolio now boasts an eclectic mix of genres that include thrillers, musicals and so on. Given his roots in the industry, the vast majority of his experience is hands-on, and he has assumed so many responsibilities during production that he always understands exactly what everyone on his team needs to succeed.

Cring is expected to fit in well with Resilient, especially considering how similar their approach to teamwork and filmmaking is. Resilient has always made it their business to support the creative process by any means necessary, and they actively foster a collaborative, respectful and fun environment in every project they take on.

Despite being an independent film production company, Resilient Film Studios is determined to make their mark, and they are always scouring the industry for like-minded, talented individuals whose projects would benefit from their professional and creative expertise. The team is also able to help projects find funding, which has often proved to be the Achilles Heel that stopped great works from reaching audiences.

Resilient Film Studios is proud to be working with Jon Cring, and they look forward to crafting the industry's future sensations together. Those interested in learning more about the accomplished director, producer and
