Cherry Hill Township, New Jersey - January 24, 2024 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Cherry Hill Recovery Center, located in Cherry Hill, NJ, and Pennsylvania Recovery Center have partnered with New Life Medical Addiction Detox Center for their outpatient or ambulatory detox services for those suffering with drug or alcohol addiction. The Cherry Hill Recovery Center offers state-of-the-art drug and alcohol detox center. The partnership of the Cherry Hill detox center with New Life Medical is designed to enhance their ambulatory and outpatient detox services.

People can get addicted to various kinds of substances, such as alcohol, marijuana, cocaine, heroin, benzodiazepines, stimulants, inhalants, sedatives, and painkillers such as vicodine, codeine, and oxycodone. A major obstacle to people who want to stop taking the addictive substance are the withdrawal symptoms. These may vary depending on the substance being taken but the typical symptoms include nausea, diarrhea, chills, muscle aches, anxiety, vomiting, and insomnia.

These withdrawal symptoms can be dangerous and even life-threatening, especially with alcohol withdrawal symptoms. Severe withdrawal symptoms for those suffering from alcohol dependence include seizures, hallucinations, delirium, extreme agitation, and extreme fluctuations in blood pressure and body temperature.

Delirium tremens is a severe form of withdrawal for those suffering from alcohol addiction and can be life-threatening. Withdrawal symptoms for those with opioid addiction include nausea and vomiting, insomnia, anxiety, hot and cold flushes, perspiration, muscle cramps, diarrhea, and watery discharge from the eyes and nose. Seizures may also pose a potential risk for people suffering from drug and alcohol withdrawal, particularly for those addicted to barbiturates, benzodiazepines, or certain opioids.

In some cases, the intensity and the complication may require hospitalization. This is necessary to ensure that health professionals can closely monitor the vital signs of the patient and offer the suitable medications to manage symptoms. Thus, it is essential for people experiencing drug or alcohol withdrawal symptoms to seek professional assistance and not attempt to experience the withdrawal symptoms at home without the care of a doctor.

Cherry Hill Recovery Center also offers outpatient rehab and detox to allow patients to maintain their daily routines. They specialize in looking for outpatient detox programs that can offer counseling, medical supervision, and support to guide patients through the detox process. This kind of approach allows patients to address their addiction while continuing to take care of their family, work, and social responsibilities.

Outpatient detox includes regular visits to the rehab facility, where individuals seeking to recover from an addiction will get medical assessments, therapeutic interventions, and medication-assisted treatment is needed. They provide a structured approach to enable close monitoring of the patient's withdrawal symptoms and adjustments to the treatment plan as needed. They will prioritize communication and working closely with patients to promote a sense of empowerment and control throughout the entire detox process.

The outpatient detox programs of Cherry Hill Recovery Center are designed to address addiction to different kinds of substances, such as benzodiazepines like Klonopin, opioids like fentanyl, and alcohol. Their holistic approach takes into account the physical, emotional, and psychological aspects of addiction, by applying a comprehensive and individualized recovery plan.

A spokesperson for Cherry Hill Recovery Center says, "Our outpatient detox programs are designed to address the unique challenges posed by each substance, providing personalized care to maximize effectiveness and promote lasting recovery. Suboxone taper is often utilized in outpatient detox programs to help individuals safely and comfortably withdraw from opioids. This medication-assisted approach, administered under medical supervision, mitigates withdrawal symptoms and cravings, enhancing the likelihood of a successful recovery."
