December 22, 2015 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

While the discussions are going on that the Philippines might not be ready for the K-12 education system due to various constraints, Good Tree International School in Philippines has successfully implemented the new K-12 system and is all ready to carry it on.

K-12 is the term given to the Education System that sums the primary and secondary education. While this highly popular education system has been implemented successfully in many nations, the Philippines are considered as 'not ready' to adopt this new education system by many people due to certain constraints. In the midst of all such speculations, 'Good Tree International School, PH' is all set to carry on with the new education program as they have implemented it successfully.

The non-profit International School, located in the Philippines, is a senior high school K-12 ready for strands like Computer Programming (TESDA National Certificate 4) and Home Economics: Cookery (TESDA National Certificate 2). The School Director Mr. David Jhung told that for 15 years, GTIS has been providing a mix of International Curriculum with the Dept. of Education of Philippines and giving a unique learning environment for the children from Kinder 1 to Grade 12.

Reportedly, the school has smart classrooms equipped with CCTV, AC and 42" LED Screens. Other major facilities that GTIS provides include Science Labs, Computer Labs, Wi-Fi enabled campus, swimming pool, gym, and a golf range. The school representatives said that the school makes sure to provide and all around development for their students and thus provides skill enhancements lessons like Taekwondo, golf, violin, vocals, DJ, swimming and much more. With highly experienced, professional and proficient teaching staff and quality instructional material, the school makes sure that students get the best education from the most knowledgeable people.

There are discussions going on whether the Philippines are ready for the K-12 education program or not.

People are having different opinions on it. There are many who think that K-12 education system will have to face a number of constraints in the Philippines and thus, the Philippines are not ready for it. But Good Tree International School in the Philippines has implemented the K-12 education program successfully and is ready to carry it on.
