Denver, Colorado based company Sweepstakes Leads has announced their donation of $10,000 to the Salvation Army to be used to provide for needy families this Christmas. The sales leads company states that they want to do what they can to help those in their community, and that they believe in what the Salvation Army does, and has been doing for decades.

"We try to give back to the community and help during Christmas," states Steve Dixon, spokesperson for the company. "December is always a tough time for many families, so we try to do what we can to help out the community."

The Salvation Army has been assisting communities since its founding in 1865. A Christian based organization, the Salvation Army offers assistance to a number of families during the Christmas season. Their traditional red kettle is commonplace in department store entries and malls around the world.

During the holiday season, the organization provides Christmas dinners, toys, and clothing for many families in need, including families of prisoners. Gifts are donated to hospitals and nursing homes, shelters, and many homes.

Sweepstakes Leads also announced that they have new sales leads available for 2016. "Many businesses also struggle during the winter months," states Dixon. "They have difficulties getting new leads for their company, and we can provide an excellent source for new customers."

Dixon says that the sales leads provided by Sweepstakes Leads are what can make the difference between going out of business and becoming a successful business. Businesses interested in learning more about the company can visit Sweepstakes Leads on Facebook.

Dixon states that giving to the Salvation Army is just one way that the company helps out in their community, but it is one of the grandest. The company feels that there are a number of families deserving of assistance, and states that the more they and other companies like them give back to their local communities, the more families they can ultimately help.
