

Divorce Mediation: The Cost-Effective Solution to Post-Holiday Surge in Separations

February 13, 2024

February 13, 2024 -
Following the festive period of Christmas and New Year, Mediation And Family Law Documents reports an identifiable surge in the divorce rates. This increase is often associated with a wide variety of factors such as heightened domestic tensions due to an increase in family interaction, elevated introspective thoughts common in the new year, and intensified financial disputes triggered by the holidays. As outlined in this press release, such escalating marital discord often culminates in divorce immediately after the holiday season.

Established 17 years ago, in Camarillo, California, by Rita Frayer J.D., Mediation And Family Law Documents employs an approach that provides an alternative to traditional, expensive litigation in divorce, child custody, child support, restraining order matters, and legal document preparation. This organization helps clients navigate through the often complex domain of family law to offer a less confrontational and more cost-effective solution.

Mediation brings with it many benefits, especially when compared to traditional litigation practices. Hiring attorneys can become quite expensive and the adversarial nature of divorce proceedings can lead to additional stress for all family members involved. Mediation, however, stands as a cost-effective alternative, which ensures everyone involved can participate in discussions, cultivating an environment of understanding rather than conflict. In mediation, an unbiased mediator aids the dialogue, leading to the peaceful and practical resolution of marital issues.

Rita Frayer, J.D., Civil Mediator, and proprietor of Mediation And Family Law Documents states, "The divorce rate tends to rise after the Christmas and New Year's holidays for a number of reasons. Primarily, these festive traditions often lead to an increase in family time and social interactions, which can exacerbate existing relational tensions. It is not uncommon for couples to postpone divorce proceedings to prevent interrupting holiday festivities, leading to a surge in divorces post-holidays."

At Mediation And Family Law Documents, an established mediation process begins with an initial consult. This is followed by acquiring essential information regarding financial assets, debts, and other pertinent details. Meetings are then held with the divorcing parties to determine mutual interests and construct realistic resolutions, thus decreasing the usual conflict that pertains to divorce. After a consensus is reached, the firm assists in formulating thorough divorce agreements, protecting the best interests of all parties involved. Clients are encouraged to seek independent legal counsel prior to court approval of the proposal.

Frayer further observes, "The self-assessment and reflection that commonly accompany the start of a new year can prompt individuals to reconsider their relationships and make significant decisions about their futures. This introspective period might lead some to the conclusion that a divorce is the best pathway forward. Furthermore, the financial burden of holiday expenses can enhance existing conflicts, compelling couples to confront their financial challenges directly following the holidays. Taken altogether, these factors lead to a higher divorce rate post-holidays.?
