Video One Productions, a video production company based in Chicago, has decided to expand its service offerings to cater to an even more diverse clientele. Besides their primary video production services, the company now plans to branch out into various niche segments such as medical media production, training video production, live streaming video services, and drone video production.

For a deeper insight into our expansive services and to understand how we cater to a wide array of industries including Biotech and Pharma, feel free to visit our website.

This extension of services, combined with their pre-existing video production and editing amenities, creates a comprehensive solution for businesses, non-profit organizations, government agencies, and individuals who wish to use video to convey their messages effectively.

Irwin Meyers, President of Video One Productions, asserted, "The inclusion of these fresh services underpins our commitment to providing an extensive array of video services. We appreciate that each customer is unique and that video requirements also vary. Our enhanced service portfolio ensures we can accommodate every client, regardless of their industry or requirements."

The newly introduced Medical Media Production service is aimed at the medical field, encompassing the creation of informative and educational videos. For the Biotech and Pharma sector, they are developing professional video content which could potentially assist in approving new drugs or therapies. The Training Video Production service focuses on creating videos for employee training and customer education.

The company also introduced Live Streaming Video Services which cater to real-time streaming of events and other content, allowing one to reach much larger audiences. Lastly, Drone Video Production uses drones for capturing one-of-a-kind and dramatized footage for various purposes.

Already recognized in the video production company landscape, Video One Productions has a rich history spanning over thirty years in the industry. With their commitment to providing professional video services at an economical cost, they have built a notable reputation.

"Video production goes beyond just being part of our job, it is our job. We dedicate our complete attention and resources to every project," Meyers stated. "We are not just broadening our services. We are enhancing our commitment to being the primary provider for video needs. As we evolve as a Video One Pro, our clients will reap the benefits. Our aim to provide top-tier video solutions remains unwavering."
