December 28, 2015 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Crime scenes can be difficult to confront, and if a loved one has been made a victim of a violent crime it makes the unenviable job of cleaning up the scene even more difficult. Now, Scene Care Inc. wants residents of Indianapolis to know they have someone in their corner who can deal with crime scene cleaning.

Company spokesman Mike Costigan says of the service, "People need someone to enter the home, or office and clean up the damages. No one should have to do that themselves and our emergency cleanup company is here to help with both the cleaning and handling of all the damages."

After someone is involved in a crime, they will probably be confused, distraught, and suffering from emotional stress, which are totally normal reactions. Scene Care services will help victims clean up a murder, suicide, or unattended death scene as well as help clients emotionally cope with the aftermath.

Scene Care will work through the area with a team of compassionate and professionally trained workers, each with years of experience in emergency cleanup services. They understand the traumatic reminder a crime scene can be, especially when residents become witnesses to a crime, or when loved ones have been victimized.

The areas contaminated must be thoroughly cleaned and the toxic materials need to be reclaimed using specific techniques to avoid further contamination and to limit the likelihood of future problems.

The effective sanitation process Scene Care utilizes at cleanup sites is a scientifically designed process that ensures that all waste material is discovered and removed. Often times the responsibility of cleaning up a crime scene usually falls on the shoulders of the relatives of the victim. Scene Care specialists believe that is not something a family needs to be focused on during an emotionally stressful time.

The company also believes that compassion, and sympathy is part of the job, and is careful to be considerate of privacy, and emotional sensitivity during the cleanup process. Company vans arrive unmarked, and technicians are plainly dressed so as to not attract any more unwanted attention than has already been gained.

Anyone interested in learning more about the services provided by Scene Care are welcomed to visit them at their website <http://www.scenecare.com/> or contact them at their offices by phone at 1-800-430-1108 for further information. They would like people to know that they are available 24 hours a day, 7 days a week, all year round.
