December 28, 2015 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Nottingham UK, 25-DECEMBER-2015 ? Nottingham Stairlift Services and Ryan Kean are pleased to offer their comprehensive guide to stairlifts. For those people who want to remain in their own homes and are finding that navigating stairs is a growing problem, the stairlifts Nottingham suppliers offer are a dependable solution to the issue. The number of suppliers in the UK has increased over the last decade, as more senior citizens decide that living in a multi-level home is preferable than trying to relocate to a nursing facility or other quarters.

The guide begins with an overview of the market. At present, there are a dozen or more major stairlift manufacturers in the marketplace. The ageing population is driving the demand for stairlifts upward significantly. Choosing the right manufacturer may not be as important as identifying the specific needs of the homeowner and constraints placed upon the design by the features of the residence.

Checking for references from family members or friends who have installed one of the stairlifts is a good starting place, according to the guide. Owners should be able to describe experiences, benefits and drawbacks if any, of the working lifts.

Comparison of the products and prices which the reputable companies offer is the next step. Ensure that similar models are compared for their prices, warranties and quality of materials. Use of the web makes such comparisons easy and convenient. Speaking with a sales representative is another way to learn more information about the product. He or she should be knowledgeable about the design and the costs.

After-sale features are just as important as before-sale. A warranty should cover more than just initial costs of the product. Other factors which affect the satisfaction long-term are the service and support which a company offers. When a lift malfunctions, it can limit access up or down to an elderly or physically challenged person.

The information presented in the guide can help to answer questions about selection and installation of stairlifts.
