Perfectly Vivid, a company with headquarters in Coronado, CA, is happy to see that their flashlight has been shown to be a dependable tool for car mechanics. The company has recently asked the general public to talk about the ways they have used the flashlight, and they have received numerous messages from mechanics, declaring that they find it to be a vital addition to their tool box. Full details are available at http://perfectlyvivid.com/.

The company's founder, Dr. Christopher Vogelmann, says: "What mechanics are saying is that the fact that it is so small, yet so durable, is exactly what they need in order to do their jobs properly. Mechanics are able to get into the small crevices and see clearly thanks to the LED light. Additionally, it is small enough to fit in their pocket when not in use. And if it does fall out, it won't break."

The flashlight has actually gone through a number of different strength tests. One Perfectly Vivid employee took it upon himself to put the flashlight through the ultimate test: driving over it. He actually drove his truck over a flashlight that had already gone through significant testing, and it was still fully operational afterwards. This is something that mechanics have also noticed, because the possibility of that situation actually happening in their line of work is very likely.

"When I heard that someone actually drove a truck over this flashlight and it still worked, I was impressed," says Sam M. "I haven't gone so far as testing it myself, although I am tempted I must say. But I have dropped my flashlight plenty of times and it still works well. I have found the flashlight to be absolutely essential for me as a mechanic, as it enables me to actually see what I am doing. This is translated to quicker and cheaper completion times for my customers, so I'm sure they love the flashlight as well."

The company continues to encourage people to share the ways in which they have used the flashlight through Facebook at https://www.facebook.com/perfectlyvivid/?fref=ts. By giving the page a 'Like', they can also be kept up to date with the latest developments.
