Tampa, FL business Qi Tribe is proud to announce the success of their new cycling hydration pack. The 'Qi Pack' comes with an advanced bite valve that allows for hands free water drinking during a cycling trip. It also comes with a waist strap, which ensures the pack stays securely against the body while cycling. The pack, while only recently released, is already proving to be very popular.

Robert Kaplan, spokesperson for Qi Tribe, says: "Our cycling hydration pack is perhaps best compared to a backpack filled with water. A plastic tube is connected to it and this tube goes over the shoulder and can then be used for sipping water while on the go. As an added benefit, because it is a backpack, it enables cyclists to take other belongings with them as well."

When cycling, one of the main challenges people experience is staying hydrated, particularly during long rides. A lot of people will bring bulky water bottles, which can be placed into mounted brackets. However, these water bottles are often very clumsy to hold and can slip out of a rider's hands. This makes them quite unsafe. The Qi Pack is designed to resolve this problem.

The pack, while having only recently been released, has already received a wealth of positive reviews. "This Ultimate Hydration Pack is a sturdy pack. It is well made and doesn't feel like it will break or tear easily at all," says Annette G. "The shoulder straps have plenty of cushion to keep your shoulder comfortable. I like the multiple straps that go around your waist. It will especially be amazing if you are hiking or doing any extreme sport cause it will stay on you and not lift up. It is not too big and has a slim design, the hose sneaks out through the shoulder straps and is easy to access. You can, of course, remove the water pack inside if you need to and use it as a slim pack."

The pack is proving to be an essential item to keep cyclists, hikers, runners and others who engage in outdoor pursuits hydrated and safe.
