A plumbing company, based in Miami, FL, has released a warning to people to make sure they properly research the plumbing companies they work with. In Florida, a plumber needs to be licensed by the Department of Business and Professional Regulations to protect consumers from the large number of unlicensed plumbers which are taking advantage of many homeowners. Unfortunately, there is a growing trend of people who do not take the time out to check on their plumbers. This is because they want their plumbing issue to be resolved quickly, so they do not do the necessary research. As a result, many people are falling victim to scams. VCG Plumbing Miami aims to help people avoid this.

Robert Lopez from VCG Plumbing Miami says: "When something goes wrong with your plumbing, you want to have it resolved there and then. However, it is hugely important that you research your options so that you actually find a licensed plumber. If not, they may leave your home in a greater mess than what it previously was, and you will also not be covered under any liability or insurance laws."

When it comes to plumbing Miami knows its fair share of unlicensed contractors, commonly referred to as 'cowboy builders'. They have cost homeowners thousands of dollars because of faulty repairs. VCG Plumbing Miami recommends that all homeowners start researching the plumbers that are available to them before an issue arises. In so doing, if something does go wrong, they can call a legit plumber immediately.

The services offered by the plumbing company itself have been very positively received by many people. "I had a leak in one of the water pipes in my wall and phoned the first plumber I came across," says Jayden T. "He simply made matters worse. I realized then that I should have done some research first, but when there is water leaking into your property, you have to act immediately. The next company I came across was VCG and they solved my issue straight away. I know who to call next time I have a problem."

In terms of plumbing services Miami residents are happy they can count on such a professional company.
