January 14, 2016 -
Colour Lock, a business in Hanworth, United Kingdom, has released a new blog post that aims to explain to people how to clean moldy leather. Mold has the potential to be very destructive, both to furniture and to human airways, but it can be cleaned off leather using the proper techniques. Besides offering this information, Colour Lock is also happy to assist people who want to have their leather upholstery cleaned. Full details are available at https://www.colourlock.com/blog.

Ram Iyer from Colour Lock says: "Leather as a furniture fashion is back with a vengeance. As a result, people are now going to their storage facilities or through their lofts in order to find their old leather furniture pieces. Very often, however, these have gotten moldy. We want to make sure people know that they do not need to throw those pieces out. Rather, with the right treatment methods, which we offer, they can clean them up and have them good as new again."

The blog post highlights the work that have to be done on various types of leather. These include leather clothing and mold in leather car upholstery and leather furniture. It then highlights the various products and steps that should be taken to remove the mold from the leather in a way that is both safe and effective. It also discusses the different types of mold that can be found in leather, as it is important to be able to make the distinction. It ends with a number of top tips. Those who find, after reading through the blog post, that they still struggle to get their leather clean are encouraged to contact Colour Block to have it done for them.

While Colour Block offers a number of important cleaning services, their focus is very strongly on empowering people to build up their own knowledge. "There are so many things that people can simply do themselves at home, using every day cleaning products," adds Ram Iyer. "By being aware of this, they could save themselves a great deal of money, as well as ensuring that their leather pieces will last as long as possible."
