London, UK, JAN 10, 2016 ? Attending network events is a great way to meet potential business partners and collect leads, however, it may be intimidating or nerve-wracking for many people, especially for introverts. For introverts, there are many ways to make attending a networking event a fun and successful experience. BNi London (www.bnilondon.co.uk), which prides itself on being an impartial web portal for information on the BNi London networking group, has announced the release of an all important article related to connecting after visiting a networking event. Entitled 'Be Social: 3 Secrets to Enjoy Attending Networking Events in London,' the article offers tips for how reconnect with great contacts one has met at networking events.

One of the ways the article suggests is that one 'should look for a website for London networking events like BNi London. These sites often locate a networking event that best fits a business profile. That way, the networker significantly increases their chances of meeting like-minded entrepreneurs.'

One other point that the article notes as important is how 'networking events also function as a social event, so networkers should never forget that it is still a gathering of professionals. Consuming alcoholic drinks may help one calm down, but do not drink so much that as to end up embarrassing oneself in front of other people. As with any occasion, moderating alcohol intake is the best course of action, assuming that cocktails and the like will be served.'

There is more to the article on the BNI London website, which was designed to provide a central database library of resources for entrepreneurs and business networkers within London. Especially for those seeking the most cost effective way to grow a business and interested in learning more about networking events within London, England. Maintained solely by BNI members and not the BNI organization itself, visitors are assured to be offered a more impartial opinion and information.
