Watertight Homes Ltd announced they are expanding their basement conversion services in Yorkshire. They aim to meet the growing need for functional living spaces by turning unused basements into custom-designed areas. With over 20 years of experience, Watertight Homes makes sure these spaces stay dry, comfortable, and suitable for different uses, such as storage rooms, utility areas, game rooms, spas, or guest bedrooms.

Founded in 2000, Watertight Homes has become a top property care and preservation firm in Leeds, West Yorkshire. They offer services like damp proofing, basement waterproofing, woodworm treatment, and timber preservation. They operate across various parts of Yorkshire and Manchester.

"Basement conversions are becoming more popular as families look to optimize their existing space without major external construction," said Mathew Milner, CEO of Watertight Homes. "We provide thorough assessments and treatment plans to ensure our clients' conversions are both practical and long-lasting."

Their process starts with a detailed inspection of the basement's structural integrity, followed by necessary waterproofing and damp proofing measures. This approach tackles potential damp and mold issues early, preventing future problems and ensuring high-quality results.

Watertight Homes specializes in meeting different client needs. Their offerings range from simple storage rooms to elaborate home cinemas or spa rooms. They focus on flexibility and customization, offering expert advice on design and project costs to help customers make informed choices.

Besides basement conversions, Watertight Homes provides other essential property care services. Their damp proofing service is noteworthy, addressing issues that can harm both health and structural integrity. They also excel in basement waterproofing and tanking, keeping basements dry and safe from water damage.

"We aim to deliver comprehensive solutions that cover various aspects of property care," Milner continued. "From woodworm treatment to wet rot treatment, we strive to protect our clients' properties from all kinds of damage."

They offer an array of services, including cavity wall tie repair and condensation treatment, highlighting their commitment to complete property preservation. Their expertise in wet rot and timber preservation helps prevent long-term deterioration.
