January 11, 2016 -

St. George Utah - Andrea LaBaron, mother of 7 children, the youngest is 6 months old, built a serious networking business in three short years.

Andrea is launching a new program to help women see a business opportunity so they can stay home, raise children, and actually make money.

According to Ellen Parlapiano, a Co-founder of mompreneursonline.com, over 90 percent of moms they've interviewed, the desire for family flexibility is the number-one reason moms work from home.

Andrea LaBaron is no different. She started her business when her youngest child was 6 years old. Her daughter just started school. She did research online and found a money-making opportunity for stay-at-home moms.

Andrea said, "I decided to go with the MLM (multi-level marketing) opportunity. It's really been a great business to do at home. I can be a mom; I can go on family trips and field trips. I can help in classes, and now I have a new baby so I am home with my baby. I'm able to grow my business while I'm growing my family, so it's been a huge plus for us."

After achieving her success, Andrea decided to launch coaching and mentoring program for stay-at-home moms. This program will help them with building successful home-based direct marketing or MLM businesses.

LaBaron announced on Google Hangout live streaming with Maria Serbina that she is planning to introduce this program to her associates and clients at the beginning of April 2016.
