

GainCert Launches Partner Program for Online Training Courses in London

October 30, 2024

London, England - October 30, 2024 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

(London, England - 3rd October 2024, 09:00GMT) GainCert has unveiled its new GainCert Partner Program, designed to provide training organisations with a quick and cost-effective way to offer high-quality online training courses to the marketplace. The GainCert program addresses a significant challenge faced by many training organisations: the time-consuming and expensive process of designing and developing their own elearning courses. By partnering with GainCert, training companies can swiftly bring a comprehensive portfolio of accredited and unaccredited online training courses to market. This initiative is poised to be a game-changer for those organisations which are looking to expand their online course offerings without the typical hurdles involved in course development.

Jay Gao, Operations Manager at Knowledge Train, a leading provider of project and programme management training, expressed enthusiasm about the new program. "The GainCert Partner Program has been a tremendous asset for us," said Gao. "It has allowed us to quickly offer a wide range of high-quality courses to our clients, complete with our own branding. This partnership has significantly reduced our time to market and associated costs, enabling us to focus on delivering an exceptional learning experience." The program's ability to streamline the process and provide ready-to-use, high-quality content is expected to attract numerous organisations seeking efficient solutions.

Organisations interested in learning more about the GainCert Partner Program can visit GainCert's official website. The initiative offers multiple advantages, including the capacity to start selling courses within hours, partner branding, and low setup costs. GainCert ensures that all courses are designed using best practices in instructional design, providing an optimal learning experience for students. This opportunity represents a significant shift for training organisations looking to enhance their course offerings without the substantial investment typically required. For more details of the courses offered by Knowledge Train via the GainCert platform, visit Knowledge Train.

Jay Gao further elaborated on the benefits of the new program, saying, "The GainCert Partner Program not only allows us to offer accredited courses immediately but also ensures that our students have access to the latest web technology. This means our courses are accessible on any device, whether mobile, tablet, or desktop, making learning flexible and convenient." GainCert's commitment to high quality and ease of integration has already proven beneficial for its first partners, Knowledge Train and agileKRC. More information about the online courses offered by agileKRC can be found on the agileKRC website.

The introduction of the GainCert Partner Program could have far-reaching consequences for the online training market. As more organisations take advantage of this opportunity, the availability of high-quality, branded online courses is set to increase. This could lead to a more competitive market, driving improvements in course quality and accessibility. Furthermore, the reduced barrier to entry may encourage smaller organisations to expand their training offerings, contributing to the overall growth of the industry. The program's flexibility and scalability make it an attractive option for a wide range of organisations, potentially reshaping the landscape of online education.
