October 10, 2024

TUCSON, AZ - October 10, 2024 -
Dr Greg Watson recently led a significant workshop at the National Association for Community College Entrepreneurship (NACCE) Annual Conference. He engaged with entrepreneurship educators from across the country, focusing on teaching the entrepreneurial mindset. Dr Greg Watson stressed the importance of educators personally embracing entrepreneurial thinking to inspire their students effectively.

The NACCE workshop gave a broad view of how to implement entrepreneurial mindsets in classrooms. Attendees took part in a mind-mapping exercise and evaluated their courses and teaching approaches. This self-assessment let them closely analyze their own practices, spotting both strengths and areas for improvement. The discussion covered a range of topics, including student activities, global challenges, fostering student experimentation, and self-reflection.

Dr Greg Watson observed, "The goal is not just to teach entrepreneurship, but to embody it. By confronting our own teaching methods, we create a dynamic learning environment where both educators and students thrive." His approach is based on the idea that learning by experience and reflecting critically are essential for effective entrepreneurial education.

A key part of the workshop was focusing on the tradition of reflective practice. Through self-review, educators could identify what strategies and activities worked well and which needed to change. By examining both personal and group practices, the event stimulated discussions on improving student engagement and innovation in classrooms.

One workshop participant shared, "Dr Greg Watson's guidance challenged us to rethink the way we teach entrepreneurship. It's about creating a space where failure is viewed as a learning opportunity, and where innovation is constantly encouraged." This aligns with Dr Greg Watson's belief that entrepreneurship education should support an environment that encourages experimentation and creative problem-solving.
