Johnson, VT: 1BankruptcyCourse.com and Ryan Hall, CEO, are pleased to announce that they offer information about how to get bankruptcy course certificate for those individuals who are thinking of filing a bankruptcy case. According to the provisions of the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and the Consumer Protection Act of 2005, those who want to file a bankruptcy case will not be eligible without getting a bankruptcy course certificate. There are various ways of accomplishing the necessary debtor education course work.

A bankruptcy is intended to give debtors the opportunity to get their financial affairs under control and to avoid falling into any of the financial bad habits which caused the debts to get out of control in the first place. A bankruptcy certificate requires that debtors get a debtor education course by an approved provider. A post filing bankruptcy course is intended to educate the debtors about how to manage money with a better plan. The debtor is taught more responsible ways of dealing with debt and loans, and <http://www.1bankruptcycourse.com> was founded to help those individuals.

Finding a provider for a bankruptcy pre discharge course is not a difficult task, Ryan says. The courses can be completed over the telephone, a regular course can be utilized, or an online course can be used. The key element is that the providers of the course must be authorized to provide the correct information and content. It is best to get the certificate from a qualified bankruptcy counseling agency.

In the course of preparing for the certification, a number of modules will be completed. The financial status of the debtor will be reviewed, including all the income, expenses, assets and liabilities. The viable solutions will be identified and discussed with the debtor. There will be an explanation of the plans so that the debtor has a full understanding about both short term and long term plans. The certification is crucial to file a bankruptcy case, but it also provides better long term personal financial management habits.
