The Dagenham based Demolition and Enabling Specialists, Randall Contracting, have launched their new website after over half a century in the industry. The company started off as a small family business in 1956 specialising in haulage and site clearance. Since then, the company has grown and expanded. They now specialise in Demolition, Enabling and Civil Engineering Works.

Stephen Randall now runs the company after taking over from his father in 1996. Stephen and his team are dedicated managers and site supervisors who work hard to maintain the standard of detail and quality of the company's service. Owner of Randall Contracting says, "I have seen construction contractors come and go and staying in business comes down to doing a good job, on time and for a fair price. That's why I've always tried to ensure that every employee has the opportunity to learn and grow in the company so they help us to do that consistently over the years." The proud owner then decided to launch a new website to celebrate their success and show all the services they have to offer.

Previous success of the Randall team includes: featuring in a movie about the rebuilding of London during the early sixties, as well as supporting NVQ programmes, both administrative and operational, and is committed to supporting the local area by following Council and community events. They work to reduce the environmental impact of everything they do as a company, 'With all demolition work we target 96% of materials for recycling,' says Stephen.

The future success of this local Civil Engineering Company is destined to be long-lived. They will continue to commit to sustainability and support local businesses when purchasing supplies and equipment. The list of measures they put in place for their environmental policy can now be viewed on the site, which can be found at <http://www.randallcontracting.co.uk>.
