Insurance Covered Breast Pumps (ICBP), an online provider of breast pumps and maternity products, is expanding its services to help more mothers obtain a free breast pump through insurance. Recognized by the Board of Certification/Accreditation, the company has built a strong reputation for excellent customer service. ICBP collaborates with most commercial insurance companies to assist mothers in selecting the best breast pump that aligns with their health plans. This effort is backed by the Affordable Care Act, which requires health plans to cover breastfeeding support and supplies. Visit the Insurance Covered Breast Pumps website to learn more.

ICBP offers a range of services aimed at making the process easier for mothers. They carry a wide selection of breast pumps from reputable brands like Medela, Spectra, and Lansinoh. They offer both manual and electric pumps, including double electric pumps for efficient pumping. An important part of their service is their insurance claim assistance. ICBP handles the paperwork for insurance claims on behalf of their customers to ensure a smooth experience. If an insurance company doesn't cover a specific breast pump, ICBP works with the customer to find budget-friendly alternatives.

"Helping mothers access the equipment they need is at the core of what we do," said a representative at ICBP. "Navigating insurance coverage can be a challenge, and our goal is to make this process as simple and stress-free as possible for mothers."

Besides breast pumps, ICBP also offers other maternity products, such as support braces and compression socks, which are helpful for pregnancy-related discomfort. The company also assists with prescriptions by obtaining them from doctors and meeting the requirements of health insurance providers. This allows mothers to concentrate on more pressing matters at home.

ICBP also manages the Mama Talk Blog, a platform for mothers seeking advice on topics related to motherhood, breastfeeding, and pumping. The blog offers information and advice based on both expert opinions and personal experiences. Understanding the difficulties some mothers face with breastfeeding, the company helps connect mothers with organizations that provide insurance-covered lactation consulting to ensure they receive the help they need. Visit the Mama Talk Blog for more insights and advice.

A representative at ICBP reflects on the company's mission, saying, "ICBP aims to support mothers by providing helpful resources and guidance. We believe that every mother should have access to the best quality breast pumps with minimal or no out-of-pocket expense. Our services ensure that these resources and benefits are maximized for new mothers."

On the ICBP website, there's a tool called "am I covered" available for all mothers. This feature allows users to quickly determine their eligibility for insurance-covered breast pumps by entering details such as their primary insurance provider. The website also offers educational resources, including informational videos, FAQs, and a list of the breast pump brands they carry. Utilize the "Am I Covered" tool today to see if you qualify for a breast pump.

Customers can visit the ICBP website to find out if they qualify for a free breast pump through insurance. This tool provides quick information and simplifies the process of acquiring a breast pump. Moreover, resources like a comparison chart of different breast pumps and a prescription form make it easier to understand options and requirements.

ICBP is part of MedSource, LLC, which is known for its customer-oriented practices. The company focuses on making it easy for mothers to access essential tools and information without hassle.

ICBP is dedicated to supporting the needs of mothers and families. By extending its services, the company continues to help support breastfeeding efforts nationwide. With a concentration on quality customer service,
