London, England based company Lucidx has recently announced that they are actively seeking the best car detailers in London for an upcoming lead generation beta test. Company representatives explained that they can get any business a five star review video in just 60 days through their new program.

Deon Bryan, spokesperson for Lucidx, declares, "We want to show potential clients just how effective we can be at getting them positive online reviews."

Deon explains that in order to be part of the beta test, companies must have an email list of no fewer than 50 customers. He states that in order to generate leads, the company will create an email server, write all email copy, and provide tracking for email analytics. The test is to show clients how they can give them a five star reputation online, which Deon points out is crucial for any business.

"Whether you operate solely online or also offline, you need a good reputation. We're ready to prove just how important this is and to show our clients how easily it can be accomplished," declares Deon Bryan.

Lucidx uses a number of proprietary proven methods, to highlight five star reviews received from clients' customers. He says that a big part of the beta will be showing clients how these reviews can lead to more customers in the future, and sharing reviews across a number of social media accounts such as Google+, Yelp, and others.

Deon explains that those interested in applying for the beta should ensure that they have an active and healthy business, as well as a steady flow of customers and leads. He says that any business that is marketing and is present in their industry should qualify. Those interested in learning more can click here to apply.
