March 07, 2025 -
International Mover has introduced new guidelines for handling fragile and valuable items during international moves to New Zealand. As a go-to resource for people relocating abroad, the company focuses on secure packing practices to make sure delicate items arrive safely. This shows International Mover's dedication to offering dependable moving solutions and expert help at every stage of relocation.

Visit their comprehensive website to explore the extensive range of services they provide, from pre-move advice to post-move assistance, ensuring a smooth transition for anyone planning to move overseas. Their commitment is further reflected in the extensive information provided through their blog.

International Mover stresses the value of using a skilled packing team to manage fragile items, like pictures, mirrors, and glassware. The company says that experience in packing is key to ensuring these valuables stay intact. Their methods include using materials like bubble wrap and old towels for cushioning, and labeling boxes with "FRAGILE" to ensure handlers are careful.

Kimberlee Fenn, Founder of International Mover, stated, "We understand the concerns our clients have when transporting their fragile and valuable items. Our team is dedicated to providing comprehensive support to ensure their possessions are safely relocated. Our focus is always on minimizing potential risks and giving our clients peace of mind throughout their move."

Part of the process at International Mover involves protecting valuable items, such as artwork, antiques, and furniture, with strong coverings. The company strongly recommends hiring a professional removal service with positive reviews and comprehensive insurance coverage. This step can help reduce the risk of accidents or theft during the move.

Proper labeling of boxes plays a major role in preventing damage. They suggest labeling boxes with detailed descriptions of their contents and placing "Fragile" stickers on them when needed. Fragile and high-value items should be placed centrally in their boxes to minimize movement and impact during transit.

The company also offers extra resources and advice for those planning international moves. For example, people moving from the UK to NZ are encouraged to read an article on South Slope News titled "How to Handle Fragile and Valuable Items During International Removals." It provides more insights and can be accessed at this link: UK to NZ Removals.

International Mover emphasizes the need for insurance to cover accidents or theft during transport. Before loading onto vehicles, boxes should be sealed tightly, and a final check confirms all items are properly packed and accounted for.

In addition to packing tips, International Mover's blog provides useful information on shipping regulations for furniture and pets, cultural adjustments, and the benefits of moving overseas. This blog is a valuable guide for anyone thinking about or preparing for international relocation.

Kimberlee Fenn added, "Our mission at International Mover has always been to ease the transition for expats moving overseas. Ensuring the safe handling and transportation of their personal belongings is an integral part of this mission." The company's dedication to providing thorough and reliable support has made it a notable name in the international moving business.

By extending these guidelines to include New Zealand-specific removals, International Mover shows its continual effort to meet the diverse needs of those moving internationally. Their steady focus on quality service and customer satisfaction is clear in their proactive approach to the moving process.
