With the many health conditions and diseases prevalent throughout the country today, decreasing hormone levels is only one of the problems people have to worry about as they age. As men and women age, changes in hormone levels lead to a delay in body functions as well as give rise to a variety of health issues and concerns. For men, lowered testosterone levels lead to a decrease in energy, added weight gain as a result of reduced muscle mass, fatigue, sleep disturbances, and a lowered libido. For women, lowered estrogen and progesterone levels give rise to hot flashes, Osteoporosis, and other common menopausal symptoms. This has led to many scientific studies on how Hormone Replacement Therapy can be used to delay the onset of aging.

?We should not underestimate the role that hormones play in our biochemistry, and more specifically, in our well-being. Our health is wholly a function of our individual biochemistry. We may not think of them this way, but both diet and exercise act as signals to the body, switching on biochemical processes that ultimately confer protection from a variety of diseases,? says Dr. Brett Osborn, a board-certified neurosurgeon.

Hormone Replacement Therapy is a direct manipulation of the body?s biochemistry.
